

STEVENS & WILKINSON

Lasting legacy through smart design

That is the hallmark of Stevens & Wilkinson, a design firm whose brand is built on successfully meeting client's design and functional goals. This rich, 93-year history and experience are combined with a creative culture and utilization of the latest technologies, positioning the firm to tackle today's design challenges with unique solutions through smart design solutions.

Stevens & Wilkinson has helped to build the Midlands. Notable projects in Columbia include development of the once abandoned Macy's department store into the vibrant Columbia Museum of Art, numerous office buildings along Main Street, including the recently completed Meridian and First Citizens buildings, the Richland County Library with a design that features a full glass streetscape to showcase the books and activity of the building interior, and the Township Auditorium, a Columbia mainstay recently renovated to expand the reception and lobby space where patrons can now graciously socialize before and after shows. The conversion of an 1893 cotton mill into the South Carolina State museum and the extensive renovation to the South Carolina Statehouse (including a structural retrofit to allow the building to withstand an earthquake) are examples of projects that have influenced the entire region.

"Our breadth of experience with culturally significant projects distinguishes us in today's market," says Bobby Lyles, company chairman. Lyles attributes the firm's long-term success to a business plan that combines the creative side of architecture and engineering with the ability to listen and understand our client's goals. "Every project requires a thoughtful, comprehensive solution," he says.

Stevens & Wilkinson is a full service design firm comprised of architects, engineers (civil, structural, mechanical, electrical), and interior designers. This working structure encourages interdisciplinary exploration while simplifying management, providing clients with a single point of contact and sole source responsibility. The firm specializes in projects for education (schools and universities), high-end corporate, government/civic, healthcare, hospitality, and military facilities.
